TRANSCRIPT

Jennifer Fisher: What can we know about artists whose names have been lost to art history? For this curatorial experiment, we commissioned professional psychics to perform readings of portraits by artists whose names are unknown. We asked the psychics to look out through the eyes of the portrait subject to see what they could perceive about the artist in the act of painting. In this way, the portrait becomes a portal into the past. While some of the readings offer potentially verifiable details...

Psychic: I believe he might have been British. He wasn't well known.

Jennifer Fisher: ...more often, the readings operate on an affective level, transmitting energies and feelings that touch on the artist's emotional states and motivations.

Psychic: He himself is coming from a family that has experienced some of the things that she is experiencing. And so this is why he's captivated by her.

Jennifer Fisher: The videos invite viewers to enter into the flow of the reading.

Psychic: Because what comes through, and right away I'm quite moved, even moved to tears, is the painter is a very beautiful man, very, very emotional, very honest man.

Jennifer Fisher: The positioning of the bench in the gallery welcomes viewers to commune with the artworks, encouraging their own intuitions. Our intention with Portraits as Portals is to honour the aspirations and lives of these artists, while exploring how intuitive methodology can be applied in the study of art history.
